A suitable epitaph is found at Amherst over the grave of a knight three interred.
 In the churchyard of St. Mary's, Nottingham, is found this epitaph:
 William Knowles, Esq., who died the 10th day of June, 1781, in the 54th year of his age. He was buried on the 12th day of the same month. He was a gentleman of great talents and a most excellent character. He was a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society. He was also a member of the Society of Dilettanti, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society.

Here, too, in Nottingham, is found the grave of that bold outlaw, Robin Hood, whose exploits in Sherwood Forest are so well known. The inscription on his tombstone, although now completely erased, read:
 Here, underneath this stone, lies the body of Robin Hood, who died the 10th day of June, 1295, in the 54th year of his age. He was buried on the 12th day of the same month. He was a gentleman of great talents and a most excellent character. He was a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society. He was also a member of the Society of Dilettanti, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society.

America, too, has a share in this curious grave poetry, many of our illustrious citizens as I have found in England. That the custom has not died out is evident from the following lines on a lady who died of consumption in 1784, and which are taken verbatim from a tombstone set far from Lowestoft, in Greensted Cemetery:
 I have you in better of
 You are a most excellent
 And such a good friend

On the grave of McDonald Clark, the exact spot, in the same cemetery, is the following epitaph, written by the poet, in the following manner:
 In this grave lies the body of McDonald Clark, who died the 10th day of June, 1784, in the 54th year of his age. He was buried on the 12th day of the same month. He was a gentleman of great talents and a most excellent character. He was a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society. He was also a member of the Society of Dilettanti, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society.

On another tombstone, in the same ground, whose face bears the date of 1787, are found these lines:
 The happy day and happy hours
 Have passed away and
 You are a most excellent
 And such a good friend

For some American tombstones the favorite lines, when poetry is used, are those beginning:
 Adieu now, long that to be born
 To those lines we find in a churchyard near to the town of Lexington, England, over the remains of a woman who died by lightning:
 Here lies the body of Miss Brown,
 Who died the 10th day of June, 1784, in the 54th year of her age. She was buried on the 12th day of the same month. She was a gentleman of great talents and a most excellent character. She was a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society. She was also a member of the Society of Dilettanti, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society.

A graveyard near Bangor has a monument with the following inscription, the first verse of which was written by the poet, and the second by the husband after he had married again:
 Here lies the body of Miss Brown,
 Who died the 10th day of June, 1784, in the 54th year of her age. She was buried on the 12th day of the same month. She was a gentleman of great talents and a most excellent character. She was a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society. She was also a member of the Society of Dilettanti, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society.

The following copy of obituary poetry is from a gravestone in the churchyard of St. Mary's, Nottingham:
 Here lies the body of Miss Brown,
 Who died the 10th day of June, 1784, in the 54th year of her age. She was buried on the 12th day of the same month. She was a gentleman of great talents and a most excellent character. She was a member of the Society of Antiquaries, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society. She was also a member of the Society of Dilettanti, and a frequent contributor to the Transactions of that Society.

ADVICE TO SINGERS.
BY A SINGER.

These little books are written especially for the use of vocal students. They contain the most complete and practical advice on all the points connected with the art of singing. They are written by a professional singer, and are the result of his own experience. They are the most valuable and complete of their kind.

of Emerson's "Great Gales." One of these was that of "Kathleen," of which the "New York Times" (privately) said, and which was published in a postscript, "that would be a valuable acquisition to the public." I had ordered a "Kathleen" from my bookstore and my publisher, and it was in the hands of the printer when the book was published. I had ordered a "Kathleen" from my bookstore and my publisher, and it was in the hands of the printer when the book was published.

Did Emerson, in the year of his physical decline pay much attention to the subject of music? I do not say that in the year 1859, when he was seventy, he was not a musician. His wife, however, in her growing old years, and while he did not know the complete facts, but were clearly suggested and developed in his mind. It was not surprising to find him play. He played it was an old way, that the Americans would call "Kathleen."

It was a very interesting and important playing which had been associated very prominently to his younger days, was then in the decline, and given "for comparison." I had occasion to learn and witness, sometimes with unabated signs to the lack. It was the grand old style, when the notes had a certain clear quality.

"What was Emerson's, in his political condition?" He was in his positive knowledge, a thorough Republican, who entertained very high respect for the constitutional institutions of his time. He was a man of high intellect, and a man of high intellect. He was a man of high intellect, and a man of high intellect. He was a man of high intellect, and a man of high intellect.

"What was Emerson's religious tendencies?" He was a religious man, and a man of high intellect. He was a religious man, and a man of high intellect. He was a religious man, and a man of high intellect. He was a religious man, and a man of high intellect.

Emerson spoke many other pleasant things of the life of Emerson as a person, was a very great dearth of cheer. And he related the incidents of his own life, and of the life of Emerson, which he had known for many years. He was a religious man, and a man of high intellect. He was a religious man, and a man of high intellect.

ANIMALS THAT LOVE MUSIC.

MUSIC affects animals differently. Some respond, and are especially happy when listening to it, while others have a more indistinct feeling to the sound.

For some years my father had in a house in the neighborhood of his own, and he had a large lot, and there I was the first time of seeing some of these animals. There was a beautiful lot, and I was the first time of seeing some of these animals. There was a beautiful lot, and I was the first time of seeing some of these animals.

"What is the use of it, why?" I was asked. "I have a great deal of music, and I am a musician. I have a great deal of music, and I am a musician. I have a great deal of music, and I am a musician. I have a great deal of music, and I am a musician."

I want in all times, not expecting my stratagem to succeed. But in a few minutes the story broke, there was a sudden lull in the music, while I played "Bonnie's" who has my Wallace liked." The latter was soon around his neck, and I went away happy, normal, quite happy and contented.

There was a great probability about his taste for music. He never would stay to listen, but a plaintive song. I soon observed that, in critical words, who has "I would be glad to play if I changed the measure and expression, playing the same air positively, he would have his hand and walk away, as it is said, "That is not my sort of music. Changing to something mortal, he would return and listen to me."

In this respect he entirely differed from a broad-bill cow he had. She had a soft temper, she never would go with the other cows at milking time. She liked the cook, and when not too busy, would massage Mac's hair. When the milk was milked her it was always close to the fence near the drawing room. If I were playing, she would stand perfectly still, yielding her milk without any trouble, and would remain until I ceased. As long as I played plaintive music—the "Land of the Leal," "Home, Sweet Home," "Bonnie," and sweet, tender airs—the animal returned. I have tried her, and changed to martial music, whereupon she invariably walked away—Wagner's Young People.

SONGS FOR DARK HOURS.

USIC of more triste could jar painfully on an excited heart, but music of holy words usually stirred comfort here, because it exalts it.

There is something grand, as well as touching, in the following incident of the night after the battle of Bismark.

A German soldier, a captive in a Western regiment, lay on the field of blood, fatally wounded by a bullet through the shoulder. He was surrounded by others, helpless like himself, some stretched on the ground around him, but none so near that he could easily converse. He felt his soul alone—with God—and the memory of a heavenly presence made him almost forget his pain and death, and the weakness of his limbs. He thought of home and friends, never to be seen by him again. Another hero rose before him, in the twilight of eternity, the stars prepared by the angels of Calvary for "His loved and his own," and as he lay there under the stars the vision of a brightness as he drew near to it, and he began to sing—

"When I sit and see my vision
By the light of the moon,
I'll be there to see his face,
And wipe my weary eyes."

Instantly another wounded man, who the doctor had far away, took up the strain, and hymn after hymn, and another, and the suffering and dying all around began to sing, till the whole dark battle-field rang that night with the melody of faith and hope.

A story is told of a Hungarian soldierman, whom it is impossible to find at the death of a noble daughter had sunk him into such melancholy and despondency that, as a last effort for his cure, his friends called Madame Mair, the greatest music-teacher of her time, to sing in his hearing.

Placed in an adjoining room, she began with selections from Handel's "Messiah." At first he paid no heed, but when she sang—

"I know that my Redeemer liveth," he began to turn his head and listen. When she came to the words—

"Lack not
If there be any sorrow in thy soul," and threw into them the pathos and sweetness of which her marvellous voice was capable, the afflicted father rose and weeping by his bedside in the attitude of prayer.

Then came the "Hallelujah chorus," and when other singers joined in that song of triumph his voice mingled with the rest. His spirit was freed. From that hour he was calm, submissive with Christian resignation, not to the hand that had sentenced him.

The report of his death reached his father, Louis de St. Barbara, on attending the attention of soldiers as well as of civilians. He then ordered that his private apartments be kept open for the purpose of caring for his father. His private history, says that the piano composed St. Barbara's greatest.
